Louise Smith I am fortunate to have worked with children in a variety of ways throughout my adult life. I have raised two children. I have been a camp counselor, a dorm parent, and a career-long classroom teacher. For the past five years I have devoted most of my time to creating and teaching my own nature programs for children. Working with small groups of children in nature-based education is truly a dream come true for me. It is exhilarating, rewarding, and great fun. I believe that spending time in nature is a basic developmental need, and I am committed to providing children with real experiences in the natural world.

Noticing Nature Activities in Noticing Nature will center on exploring and celebrating each passing season. Through active investigation of the pond, meadows and woodlands around Robin Crest, we will learn about the life cycles and seasonal adaptations of plants and animals. We will celebrate fall, winter, and spring with traditional activities of each season. In fall, for example, we'll rake leaves, plant flower bulbs, and harvest grapes. In each season we will also work on a variety of nature-based arts and crafts projects. Additional activities will evolve from the discoveries and interests of children in the group.

Dr. Sara Robinson I am the founding director of Robin Crest and have been working directly with children in an educational setting for three decades. I am the mother of three children, four grandchildren, and I dote on a loving border collie. I enjoy traveling and have a variety of interests. I delight in working with students to help them maximize their potential and develop their interests.

Tutoring/Small Group Instruction

Individualized instruction in areas of academic need including language arts, mathematics, sciences, and social studies. Small groups can be established when advantageous.
